CONTROL OF THE DANUBE RIVER IS OBJECT OF BOTH SIDES IN ROUMANIAN CAMPAIGN

"IRON GATES OF THE DANUBE" - GEN. MACKENSEN.

Where Austria-Hungary, Roumania and Serbia meet on the Danube is one of the important strategic points in the present warfare, the river there passing through the famous "Iron gates" which barred navigation until a channel was opened in 1896. The Danube, which is second only to the Volga among European rivers, makes two sharp turns there, changing its course from northeast to south to southwest. The "Iron gates" are controlled by the Roumanians. On the Hungarian side is the town of Orsova; on the Roumanian side is Timisoara-Severin. "At Orsova (on the frontier) we repulsed three enemy attacks," says a Roumanian report. Mackensen, the famous German general, is fighting for the control of the Danube, which means virtually the decision of the fate of a large part of the Balkan peninsula. It is for this purpose that the German drive was undertaken through the Dobruja province of Roumania, the Bukarest-Constanza railroad being the immediate objective. To relieve the pressure the Roumanians crossed the Danube into Bulgaria.

THE FUTURE OF ASIA MINOR

That Asia Minor will pass to Italy after the war, as a part of her reward for participation in the struggle, seems now to be a foregone conclusion. It is alleged that Italy has already dispatched an army to Rhodes for the purpose of occupying that part of the Asiatic continent which is to fall to her lot. Italy now occupies Rhodes and 13 other islands in the Aegean which were formerly the property of Turkey. During the Turco-Italian war Italy took possession of these islands with the understanding that they were to be restored to the Porte in case the Turkish government did not interfere in the pacification of Tripoli. Turkey failed to live up to this agreement, using every means in her power to foment trouble in Italy's African possessions, and as a result Italy has a valid claim to the islands in question. It is by no means a small undertaking that Italy assumes in Asia Minor, as the population, composed of Turks, Arabs, Greeks, Kurds, Armenians and other races, are turbulent and hard to control. In further consideration of the partition of Turkey, it is predicted that Russia will gain the largest share, including the Asiatic coast of the Black Sea and the exclusive mastery of that body of water, as well as the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora, and the Dardanelles. It is also predicted that the Czar will get Armenia, northern Mesopotamia, and the control of Persia's destinies. Syria, it is believed, will go to France, and the port of Alexandria, the future terminus of the Baghdad railway, and the country southeast of the Taurus mountains, will be awarded to Great Britain, which will thus be able to unite the Mediterranean and India.
